Survey Says: Readers Value Community Newspapers

Published Thursday, March 28, 2013 7:37 PM

By Richard Eckstrom

Although our society is becoming more and more plugged into the Internet, there are some things the online universe cannot provide or substitute for us.

This includes the unique services provided to citizens by community newspapers.

Weekly and small daily papers help strengthen communities, build local economies and report on local governments.

Readers of community newspaper understand and appreciate these services, too.

That fact is underscored in an annual survey taken by the National Newspaper Association, which recently released its latest survey results.

The numbers are self-evident, said Merle Baranczyk, president of the National Newspaper Association and publisher of a community newspaper in Colorado.

The responses indicate the level of connectedness people have with their community newspaper.

From year to year, the studies have shown that people believe in their local papers, for the news they need and the advertising they rely on.

With consolidation in the newspaper industry, the rise of the Internet and even some papers shutting down, readers no doubt have heard much about the death of community newspapers.

But to borrow a phrase from Mark Twain rumors of the death of community papers are greatly exaggerated.

Consider the responses in the newspaper group’s latest survey, which sampled newspaper readers in small towns and cities where the circulation size of the local paper was 15,000 or less:

92 percent said they thought local newspapers were informative.

84 percent said they looked forward to reading their local paper.

83 percent agreed that they relied on their local paper for local news and information.
n 69 percent thought their local paper provided valuable advertising and shopping information.

In some ways, as we move deeper into this new digital era, community newspapers are becoming even more important.

That's because they help foster something important that the Internet and iPhones and iPads and all of the other newfangled gadgets cannot provide — a feeling of community.

After all, it's in the pages of community newspapers where folks can read about civic club fundraisers, church gatherings, honor roll lists, birthdays, family reunions, and other happenings that provide much of the content of our day-to-day lives.

In this way, community newspaper readers enjoy a special connection to their local paper — a relationship to it, if you will.

The responses to the newspaper group's survey bear out these facts.

On average, respondents said they spend nearly 40 minutes reading through their local paper. And nearly half said they hold onto it for more than 10 days.

And unlike some of our other modern-day institutions, community newspapers are trusted by those they serve.

About 70 percent of the survey participants said the accuracy and coverage of their local paper is good or excellent, with 59 percent saying the same about their paper's fairness.

Thomas Jefferson once said that if he were left to decide whether we should have a government without newspapers or newspapers without a government he wouldn't hesitate to choose the newspapers.

I think readers of today's community newspapers understand the wisdom of Jefferson's words.

Richard Eckstrom, a CPA, is the comptroller general of South Carolina and commander of the S.C. State Guard.

Opinions that appear on this page in Letters to the Editor or in columns do not necessarily reflect the opinions of this newspaper.

Comments

Notice about comments:

Gtowntimes.com is pleased to offer readers the enhanced ability to comment on stories. We expect our readers to engage in lively, yet civil discourse. Gtowntimes.com does not edit user submitted statements and we cannot promise that readers will not occasionally find offensive or inaccurate comments posted in the comments area. Responsibility for the statements posted lies with the person submitting the comment, not Gtowntimes.com. If you find a comment that is objectionable, please click "report abuse" and we will review it for possible removal. Please be reminded, however, that in accordance with our Terms of Use and federal law, we are under no obligation to remove any third party comments posted on our website. Read our full terms and conditions.